Semester start: 1 October (winter semester) und 1 April (summer semester)

Language(s) of instruction: German and English

Introduction

The Master African Languages and Cultures is a research-oriented program with a strong connection to applied issues focusing on theories and methods in linguistics of African languages, language in African cultures and Ethiopian Studies. Graduates with an M.A. in African Languages and Cultures are well prepared for a position in research, education and consulting. By extending language skills in Swahili, Hausa or Amharic, or learning a further African language, you will extend as well your comprehension from local 'doing things with words' to traditional knowledge and philological methods in order to develop your own capacity of working autonomously with primary sources of language data, oral and written history, literatures, cultures, and religions in their relevant context.

The study programme envisages an obligatory thematic concentration on the following study profiles:

- (1) Applied African Linguistics: Language Education and Language Planning
- (2) Linguistic Analysis and Language Documentation
- (3) Ethiopian Studies
- (4) Language in Culture

Course themes and goals

The study profile Applied African Linguistics: Language Education and Language Planning offers advanced courses in all areas of language management, status and corpus planning and related field of language in education. A strong focus is laid on the aspect of societal multilingualism in Africa and its relevance to the educational sector but as well the informal educational background of people coming from African countries. Graduates get the right qualifications for Africa related responsible jobs in education, governmental or non-governmental cooperation and international organizations. The languages of instruction are both English and German.

The study profile Linguistic Analysis and Language Documentation offers advanced courses in all areas of formal grammar and linguistic field methods. Topics include elicitation, transcription, annotation and analysis of linguistic data from un(der)described African languages. It also covers aspects of documentary linguistics, the production of linguistic-ethnographic records through annotated audio and video data. The languages of instruction are both English and German.

The study profile Ethiopian Studies develops and deepens the graduates' knowledge of Ethiopian languages, literatures, cultures and religions. It gives the opportunity to learn the philological method and to apply it to the texts transmitted in manuscripts. The students will be able to analyze texts in Ethiopian languages, both linguistically and philologically, and thus gain insight into such areas of knowledge as history with focus on ancient and premodern history, historical linguistics, religious history of Ethiopia and Eritrea, literature, and manuscript studies. Ethiopian Studies is primarily oriented to the study of linguistics, philology, history, and literature. It considers the oral as well as the manuscript traditions of Ethiopia and Eritrea. The language of instruction is English.

The study profile Language in Culture allows students with a B.A. in African Languages & Cultures or a degree in a similar program to improve their methodological skills and theoretical knowledge in the field of mono- and multilingual communication, language use and knowledge transfer in Africa. Language in culture and communication in African societies are treated from a broad perspective based on the insight that social interaction and collective transmission of knowledge in African cultures can only be comprehended by a deep understanding of language and codifications of verbal interaction. A focus of this study programme is laid on communication in multilingual settings and the construction of social meaning in culturally diverse societies. Graduates get the right qualifications for Africa related responsible jobs in the media, education, and in the field of documenting or communicating African cultures. The languages of instruction are both English and German.
