The Program

The International Master in Southeast Asian Studies offers a 2-year program exploring the languages and cultures of three regions: Indonesian and Malay Studies, Thai Studies (also including Lao Studies), and Vietnamese Studies. Furthermore, Thai Studies can also be studied as regional specialization in the M.A. Program in Buddhist Studies. The first year of the program comprises eight compulsory modules and a range of electives, while the second year contains a semester abroad and a semester to write the concluding thesis. The taught modules of the first year explore Southeast Asian Literatures and Media in the first semester and Southeast Asian History and Society in the second. The module Theories and Methods that spans both semesters is aimed to forge a connection between teaching and research of the Department and to provide the student with insights into a number of disciplines and research methodologies.

Students choose one of the three regional specializations (Indonesian/Malay, Thai, or Vietnamese Studies), all of which are related to the research profiles of the Asia Africa Institute and the Department of the Languages and Cultures of Southeast Asia. Our research spectrum includes such diverse fields as manuscript cultures, modern literature, history, religion and society.

Objectives

Our program targets German and international students, particularly B.A. graduates of Southeast Asian Studies programs. Graduates from Southeast Asian universities are also invited to apply. The program is taught in English and applicants must submit a certificate of English language proficiency equivalent to B2 level of the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR).

Besides imparting intercultural skills, the program focuses on the languages, cultures, histories and societies of an important, culturally diverse and dynamic Asian region. In accordance with the high academic standards of the University of Hamburg, students receive rigorous training in one of the program's three areas of concentration: Indonesian and Malay Studies, Thai Studies and Vietnamese Studies. The M.A. prepares students for both academic and practical careers as well as for doctoral programs in Southeast Asian Studies. The M.A. graduate of our program will have a profound knowledge of at least one of the taught languages and cultures, and will have been trained in carrying out independent research and applying other critical academic skills.
